

Jackie Spring began working with children in 2006. Driven by her passion for communication, empathy, and helping others be more engaged in their lives, Jackie gained experiences working with children and teenagers from diverse backgrounds across a variety of settings before beginning work with children with Autism in 2011. Jackie trained as an ABA therapy assistant using Precision Teaching and Applied Behavioral Analysis across a broad range of affected children with Autism for the Organization for Research and Learning, and then as a Lead Therapist for Lefebvre Consulting. Combining these skills with her aptitude for organization, communication, and supervisory leadership, she currently holds a position as a Program Manager for ALSI, managing the implementation of treatment plans for children with Autism, internationally.

Jackie received her bachelor's degree in Family, Youth, and Community Sciences with a specialization in Psychology from the University of Florida in 2008.

Jackie spends most of her time in the mountains of Western North Carolina where she enjoys gardening, hiking, partner acrobatics, and building community.
